In Unix-like operating systems, true and false are commands whose only function is to always return with a predetermined exit status.Programmers and scripts often use the exit status of a command to assess success (exit status zero) or failure (non-zero) of the command. The true and false commands represent the logical values of command success, because true returns 0, and false returns 1.

If (C) is both true and false, then (C) is only false. But then, it is not true.Since initially (C) was true and is now not true, it is a paradox.However, it has been argued that by adopting a two-valued relational semantics (as opposed to functional semantics), the dialetheic approach can overcome this version of the Liar.. There are also multi-sentence versions of the liar paradox.
